

The Little Engine That Could

What if you woke up in a book? What would you say? The Little Engine That Could. So imagine going to bed after reading extra cheesy pizza and waking up in a book with a thousand trains, then you turn to the left and turn to the right and notice that you're far from home but the place has a very familiar look to it. So you hear a steam engine and see big trains then notice the smallest train of all. Suddenly you know you're in a book and the book is The Little Engine That Could. You see all the freight trains heading off on all different routes. But then you turn to the right because you hear a little steam engine running wildly to the passengers. Then suddenly, you hear him crying because no one will ride him. So an idea captures your mind and you decide to board him to show that he is a great working train. So you run pass everyone yelling with excitement to board the train while on the corner of your eye, you see people buying tickets for the little engine that could. They bought tickets in excitement to ride. So now you're here on the smallest train watching tv and playing cards with the friends you've just made and said to yourself, "This really is the little engine that could."